of the referees in a case that excited unusual interest in our courts, from the singular nature of the claim, and the strange story which it disclosed. The plaintiff, who was captain of a ship which traded principally with the West Indies, had married quite early, with eve , prospect or happiness. Tris wife was said to have been extremely beautif il, and no less lovely in character.

After living with her in the most unnterrupted harmony for five years, daring which time two daughters were added to the family, he suddenly resolved to resume his occupation, which he had relihquished on his marriage, and when his youngest child was but three weeks old sailed once more for the West Indies. His wife, who was devotedly attached to him, sorrowed deeply at his absence, and found her only comfort in the society of her children and the hope of his return. But month after We hope by low prices and fair dealing to merit a share of public patrousge. against hope, the unhappy wife was compelled to believe that he had found a grave beneath the weltering ocean. Her sorrow was deep and heart-felt, but the evils of poverty were now added to her afflictions, and the widow found herself obliged to resort to some employment in order to support her children. Her needle was the only resource, and for ten years she labored early and late for the miserable pittance which is No. 7. No. 1. Dist. (s arross. No. 2 No. 8 ever grudgingly bestowed on an humble

A merchant in New York, in moderate but prosperous circumstances, accibecame acquainted with her, and pleased with her gentle manners no less than her extreme beauty, he endeavored to improve their acquaintance to friendship.

After some months, he offered her his hand and was accepted. As the wife of a successful merchant she soon found herself in the enjoyment of comforts and luxuries such as she had never before possessed. Her children became his children, and received from him every advantage which wealth and affection could procure.

Fifteen years passed away; the daughters were married, and by their stepfather were furnished with every comfort requisite to their new avocation as A slight flush passed over her proud housekeepers. But they had hardly quitted his roof when their mother was taken ill. She died after a few days, and from that time until the period of which I speak the widower had resided

Now comes the strange part of the story. After an absence of over thirty years, during which time no tidings had arrived from him, the first husband returned as suddenly as he had depart-

He had changed his ship, adopted another name, and spent the whole of that long period on the ocean, with only transient visits on shore, while taking in or discharging cargoes, having been cereful never to come nearer home than New Orleans. Why he had acted in this unpardonable manner towards his family no one could tell, and he obstinately refused an explanation. There were strange rumors of slave-trading piracy afloat, but they were whispers of conjecture rather than truth. Whatever might have been his motives for his conduct, he was certainly anything but indifferent to his family concerns when he returned. He raved like a madman when informed of his wife's second marriage and subsequent death, vowing vengeance upon his successor, and terrifying his daughters by the most awful threats in case they refused to acknowledge his claims. He had returned wealthy, and one of the mean reptiles of the law, who are always to be found crawling about the halls of justice, advised him to bring a suit against the second husband, assuring him that he could recover heavy damages. The absurdity of instituting a claim for a wife whom death released from the jurisdiction of earthly laws, was so manifest, that it was at length

She used to carry out every Saturday evening the work which had occupied her during the week, and bring back employment for the following one, Saving this wearisome visit to her employers and her regular attendance at church, she never left the house. She often spoke of my father, and of his anticipated return, but at length she ceased to mention him, though I observed she used to weep more frequently than ever. I then thought she wept because we were poor, for it happened that our support was only a bit of dry bread; and she was accustomed by the light of the chips which she kindled to warm her was like a sudden entrance to Paradise. paused.
